Orland Township Turns Democratic

One of the hottest primaries in which Orland township normally a strong Republican town, went nearly entirely Democratic, was held Tuesday. The primary took on a local fight in which the voters were chiefly interested in the contest for Democratic precinct committeeman in which assessor Martin Smith and Andrew Ludwig were the contestants. A large number of Republican voters deserted their party and asked for a Democratic ballot in order to cast a vote for either one or the other of the candidates for precinct committeemen. A large number of Republican voters had their votes challenged and had to have their votes sworn in. Every possible voter was hauled to the polls.

After the smoke of battle had cleared away, the result was that Andrew Ludwig, present committeeman was re-nominated. The vote was as follows:

Andrew Ludwig	206
Martin Smith	161

Ludwig's majority 44

Only 43 Republican votes were cast. Dr. W. R. Schussler was nominated precinct committeeman without opposition.

Thanks!

Vote "Yes" To Sell School Buildings

The next election of much importance to Mokena residents is the annual school election in district 159 which will be held this Saturday afternoon.

The question as to whether or not the old school house on the Front street and the one room school house in the former Marti district on Wolf road north of Mokena, shall be sold, will be voted on at this election.

As both buildings in question are abandoned and are facing ruin, The News-Bulletin finds it to the best interests of the school district that these buildings be sold and some cash realized for the district than to allow the buildings to deteriorate and in the long run become absolutely worthless. Vote "Yes" on the extra ballot regarding the sale of these school buildings.

Interest is also being manifested in the office of school director. Two candidates have been named for the office, namely Mrs. Dorothy Mau and Lawrence Kohl. J. H. Nordsell who was mentioned as a candidate for the office of school director last week, has since decided not to enter the race.

The following poem was written for the club by Dorothy Campbell:

THE TALKING PIANO
The piano said to me one day,
You must travel along life's way
And learn to play the piano well,
As good as you read or write or spell.

I thought that I must and so I started.
Along the keys my fingers darted.
Now I can play the piano well,
As well as I read or write or spell.

School Trustees

Called In On The Wolf Road Case

The Wolf Road right of way matter thru the Cleveland farm will be aired in the Will County Circuit Court again next Tuesday morning when the school trustees of Frankfort township will be asked to prove ownership of a strip of land of 29 feet adjoining the Cleveland school. The school directors in their recent injunction case contended the land in question belongs to the school and cannot be condemned. On the other hand C. H. Warning also claims title to this land. If the land belongs to the school and cannot be condemned for road purposes, then the Wolf road will have to be built around the school to connect with the Lincoln highway.

The case will come up before Judge Hunter of Kankakee County who heard arguments in the case last Tuesday. The judge held that school directors cannot ask for an injunction, but that it is the township school trustees who are obliged to defend school property.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

THE TENDER HEART OF FARMER BROWN'S BOY

WHEN Nimble Heels the Jumping Mouse so unexpectedly jumped up inside the trousers' leg of Farmer Brown's boy he probably was more frightened than Farmer Brown's boy himself, and that is saying considerable. You see, for a minute or two Farmer Brown's boy didn't have the least idea whose sharp little claws those were clinging to his leg. He simply knew that there was something killed you and I wouldn't have done that for the world," he cried.

There were tears in the eyes of Farmer Brown's boy, as he stroked the soft little body with one finger. A leg moved and then kicked feebly. Into the eyes of Farmer Brown's boy crept a look of hope. Without stopping to turn down the leg of his trousers, Farmer Brown's boy started for the Smiling Pool as fast as he could run. When he got there he dipped a little water up in the hollow of his hand and sprinkled Nimble Heels. Nimble Heels gasped a little and Farmer Brown's boy put a drop or two of water in his mouth. Nimble Heels opened his eyes. You see, he hadn't been dead after all, but he might have died if Farmer Brown's boy hadn't tried to bring him back to life.

"I'm so sorry," murmured Farmer Brown's boy as he stroked the little brown mouse. "I'm so sorry. I guess now I'd better take you home so as to be sure you quite recover." And so it was that Nimble Heels began a long journey.

MEADOWS OF MEMORY

By ANNE CAMPBELL

ACROSS the meadows of my memory
A collie dog comes running.
The buttercups are growing happily,
The quail are sunning.
A meadow lark is whistling from the fence—

A rail fence sprawling—
And I can hear through thickets green and dense,
The crickets calling.

The butterflies are wheeling in the sun.
The locust trees are sending
Their perfume to a child—a lonely one—

Whose day is ending.
When in the West the banners of the night
Display their beauty.

A little girl will take her bedtime flight—
A tiresome duty.

My room still stands within my memory.

I see each low brown rafter.
Then I remember—though I long to be
Where childish laughter
Made every hour of living a refrain,
Serene and glowing—

The house is tumbled down, and in the lane
The weeds are growing.

Ancient Legend Lingers

Around Famous Bridge

The famous old bridge of Avignon, France, on which all beginners test their French in kindergarten, is still there for you to see—or, at least, part of it is. Its beautiful old arches and the great palaces of the popes have been sketched by hundreds of artists.

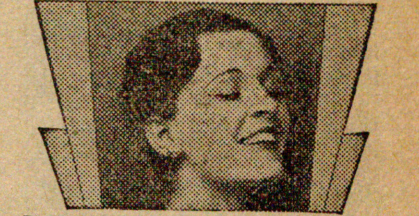

The inhabitants of this section of France still believe firmly in the legend of St. Benedict, who, they say, built the bridge, and who was buried on it. Historians believe that St. Benedict, or Benezet, was one of the Brotherhood of Bridge Builders, a medieval order which built most of the beautiful bridges of the time.

The legend says that Benezet was a poor little urchin commanded by God to build the Avignon bridge. The populace hooted at him when he made this claim, and he was dared to hoist a huge rock which no man could move, to show that he was really favored by heaven. Benezet said a prayer and easily hoisted the rock on his shoulders. So the bridge was built, in the Twelfth century, and its remaining arches are still one of the sights of famous Avignon.

The WEDDING MARCH MURDER

SYNOPSIS

Waiting in the minister's study, Jim Franklin, about to be married to Doris Carmody, is stabbed to death. Peter Cardigan, with Sergeant Kilday, begins the investigation. Franklin, while waiting, had visitors, among them his mistress, "Choo Choo" Train; his intended wife's father, Ambrose Carmody; her brother, Rylie; Daniel Bullis, politician, and a woman in a blue frock. Rylie Carmody admits trying to stop the wedding, after being informed by Webster Spears that Franklin was still friendly with Choo Choo, despite his approaching marriage. Kilday secures the dead man's keys. From Callis Shipley, one of the bridesmaids, Rylie's friend, the investigators learn nothing. An interview with Bullis is fruitless. Webster Spears admits informing Rylie Carmody of Franklin's relations with Choo Choo, for Doris Carmody's sake, in the hope of preventing the wedding. Fletcher, Franklin's man-servant, is reticent. An interview with Milo Dunbar, Franklin's law partner, and search of the dead man's office, reveals nothing of importance. Choo Choo admits her relations with Franklin were to continue after his marriage. Six of the seven keys Franklin carried are traced. Kilday decides to arrest Webster Spears and have Rylie Carmody shadowed. Callis Shipley vainly tries to convince Cardigan of the innocence of Rylie Carmody and Spears.

"That's why I denied what Web had said at the church. That looked damaging for Rylie, too. Oh, I've been very foolish. I can see that now. But I was only trying to help Rylie."

"Perhaps," suggested Peter, "we'd better go down to headquarters. Kilday will want to hear your story."

Callis shrugged helplessly. "What would be the use? He won't believe anything I say, now, no matter how true it is."

"And you think I might?"

"I had hoped you would," simply. "Sergeant Kilday terrifies me. He's a man-hunter. To him, this is just another murder. Some one must pay, even," she hesitated, "even if it is Rylie."

"I'm not afraid to tell you the truth. I might be, if Rylie were guilty, but he isn't. I'm not afraid to ask you to help me. And I need help, now, Mr. Cardigan. Rylie is being followed by the police. They suspect him of the crime, largely because of what I have done. Web has been arrested, and I'm afraid that's my fault, too. You see, I'm the one responsible for the predicament they both are in. If I hadn't tried to twist the facts around, neither of them would be suspected now, I'm sure. It's my fault, and I must help them, some way. That's why I've come to you. You must believe me, Mr. Cardigan. And you must help me."

"I'm afraid you overrate my ability," Peter replied.

"If it's a question of money," the girl continued eagerly, "I will pay any fee you name. I've read of you, Mr. Cardigan. I know you can help me if you only will. You have solved other mysteries where the police have failed. Money is no object, you understand."

"You aren't asking me to solve the mystery, Miss Shipley," declared Peter soberly. "You're asking me to prove that these two young men are innocent."

"But if I know they are innocent—" she pleaded.

Peter braced himself against the wistfulness of the girl's appeal.

Determining that Callis should not fool him again, he realized grudgingly that he hoped this time he might believe her.

From the first, he had wanted to believe her, yet she had betrayed his instinctive confidence in her, not once, but several times. Now, trapped by these admitted discrepancies in her previous testimony, she courted his assistance. Probably she had sensed his sympathy from the first and relied upon its spell now. Was that why she was reluctant to submit to Kilday's questioning? He was angry, with himself as much as with the girl.

"What were you doing at Spears' last night?" he challenged.

"I knew it was he who told Rylie about that actress. That was why Rylie was so anxious to stop the wedding and I wanted to be sure Web didn't say anything that would increase the suspicion against him."

"What did Web really say when he left the church?" Peter checked another discrepancy in her story.

She hesitated only for an instant. "He said, 'Where's Rylie? If he were here, there wouldn't be any wedding.' You see I told you the truth the first time, but after Web and I talked it over, we decided that remark was very damaging to Rylie. We both agreed to change it a little, for that reason."

"Rylie had told you that he intended to stop that wedding, hadn't he?" Peter was struggling against the growing conviction that she was telling him the truth now. The manner in which she was able to warp his sympathies to her side made him doubtful of his judgment.

"Yes, But," she hastened eagerly to explain, "he was trying to stop it by informing his father about this actress. If he had planned a murder, would he have gone to the church, where he quarreled with Franklin before two witnesses? Would he have left him there to hurry home in search of his father? Those aren't the actions of a murderer, Mr. Cardigan. Murderers don't leave as plain a trail as that."

"Not usually. Not unless the murder was a last resort, after everything else had failed."

Callis restrained a gesture of impatience. "You admit that he was trying to stop the wedding by other means. That's why he hurried home in search of his father, Mr. Cardigan. And if he returned to the church in time to commit the crime, he was there in time to see his father and stop the wedding by more peaceable means. Even if he had been ready to commit a crime to stop that wedding, it wasn't necessary. Can't you see that? All he had to do was see his father and his purpose would have been accomplished."

It was a telling argument, as far as Rylie Carmody went. But it did not absolve Webster Spears of complicity in the crime.

Peter reviewed the evidence in his mind. Certainly, if Rylie had been in search of his father, there was still time to see him at the church if he had arrived in time to commit the murder. But how about Webster Spears?

Why had he, as was shown, left the church at the last minute? Was this girl's first interest really in young Carmody? Was that the sole reason for her surreptitious visit to Spears' home the previous evening? Peter hazarded a shot in the dark.

"Where did Webster Spears go when he left the church, Miss Shipley? Why did he leave, just when he did?"

"He told me he went straight home, because he didn't want to stay and see Doris marry Jim Franklin. Web was in love with her—had been, always."

"He was rather late in deciding he didn't want to see the ceremony, wasn't he?"

"I think," the girl spoke very slowly now, "I think he hoped Rylie would find a way to stop the wedding, after

He Kissed Her on the Lips.

what he had told him. But as the time approached and it became evident that Rylie had failed, he decided to leave. That's why he made the remark he did. He couldn't understand what had happened to Rylie. You see, up to the very last, he hoped the wedding would be stopped."

"Then perhaps it was he who took the only method left to stop it," declared the novelist grimly. "It begins to appear that Sergeant Kilday isn't far off the track, after all."

"Would he have made such a remark as he did had he been on the way to murder Franklin?" demanded Callis incredulously.

"Possibly. A man on his way to commit a crime isn't thinking rationally or he'd abandon his errand."

"No," Peter rose with an air of finality. "I'm sorry, Miss Shipley, but I'm afraid I can't be of much service. Your argument concerning Rylie is very convincing. It seems logical to believe that he wouldn't have killed Franklin, but instead, would have gone to his father and halted the wedding in that way."

"But with Spears it was different. He had already gone to every one he could. He had even telephoned Ambrose Carmody, anonymously, telling him about Choo Choo Train. Everything we know about the case clearly demonstrates that Webster Spears was doing everything in his power to stop that wedding. There is no good reason to believe he was not the man who found in Franklin's death the only possible means of preventing his marriage to Doris Carmody."

CHAPTER IX

Rylie Disappears

Callis Shipley's visit to Cardigan had been the result of an earlier interview with Rylie Carmody. Rylie had driven her home. In the entry, they paused to watch a very plain, self-effacing man clamber from his taxicab several doors away. But he did not enter the house in front of which he had stopped. Instead he fumbled with and lighted a cigar, until the cab had driven from view. Then, apparently with no destination in view, he sauntered slowly up the street.

Callis, peering from behind the curtains, made no attempt to conceal her annoyance. "Is it the same man who followed you this morning?"

"What difference does it make, dear?" Rylie pulled her away from the window. "If Sergeant Kilday wants to have me shadowed, there's nothing I can do about it. We both know I'm innocent. Innocent people have nothing to fear from the police, Callis. I suppose they have to watch everybody connected with the case until it is solved."

"They aren't following me," the girl reminded him gravely. "They aren't following your father. There are a great many people connected with the case that aren't being followed, Rylie. I can't help it."

"How about Web? He was only trying to help me keep you out of this. I'm sure he isn't a murderer. He can't be! But just the same, they have him in jail. Oh, it worries me, Rylie. I can't help it."

He kissed her on the lips and held her to him. "It's almost worth it to know that you care so much, darling," he muttered.

Callis pressed her sweetheart to her fiercely. Her face was white. "It was really my fault that they suspect you," she said. "I—I was afraid, at first, that you had done it, Rylie. It terrified me. That's why I lied to the police—at first. That's why they suspect you."

She refused to meet his gaze as he relinquished his hold upon her. "After I knew how determined you were to stop the wedding, and then discovered you were not in the church, I didn't know what to think. When Web Spears told me you weren't there, I made some kind of excuse and ran around to the sacristy in search of you. Nick Royce was there. Jim Franklin was in Doctor Abernathy's study. When Nick saw how troubled I was, he knocked on the door and asked if you were there. I can't tell you how relieved I felt when I learned you weren't."

She made a tremulous effort at a smile and evaded his arms. "I must tell you the whole thing. When Jim never appeared at the altar, I was terribly frightened. I could think only of you. You see, Rylie, you had been so determined to keep him from marrying Doris. The last thing you said to me was, 'There'll never be a wedding today, honey. I'm going to have a show-down with Jim Franklin.' That kept ringing in my ears, there in the church, when he didn't come. I didn't like him, either, but I was praying for him to come, praying harder than I ever had in my life, because I was afraid if he didn't, it meant that something terrible had happened, and that you were responsible."

"Don't worry, dear. Everything turned out for the best." With awkwardly gentle hands Rylie stroked the gold of her hair.

"For the best? With Jim Franklin murdered, Web arrested for the crime and detectives shadowing you?"

"I only meant that the wedding had been stopped, even if I didn't do it. And they can't pin it on me, I'm innocent." He shrugged. "Oh, Callis. Don't look at me like that. You can't expect me to pretend any sorrow for Jim Franklin's death. I hated the man. The world is better off without him. Better off, I tell you." His voice had grown suddenly harsh.

"Do you realize what a hell Doris' life would have been, married to him? With a chorus-girl mistress that half of New York knew about? Have you seen the newspapers? Doris' picture, yes, and yours, too, flaunted on the front pages of the tabloids, together with photographs of that actress!"

"I'm not sorry for Franklin, I'm glad! Glad that it happened! Glad that my sister was saved from him, no matter how it happened! I'll be glad if the murderer gets away. I hope they never find him." He sank into a chair and clasped his white face in both hands.

The girl was on her knees beside him, her soft arms clasping his knees. "You mustn't, Rylie, you mustn't," she whispered. "No matter how you feel, you must never talk like that again. What if some one else were to hear you? Oh, when I think that it's my fault that they suspect you—"

Tenderly he took the girl in his arms.

"It's no one's fault, and I'm in no danger, really, honey. You must remember that. Keep repeating it to yourself. There isn't any danger. There isn't. There can't be, because Rylie didn't do it."

"It's like a terrible shadow, that is slowly coming between us," the girl whispered.

"Nothing can ever come between us, dearest," murmured Rylie.

"Doris probably thought that, too, just before the wedding, and see what has happened to her." Callis shivered.

"I wish we could figure out some way of running away from it all. I never want to see another detective again. Of course, that's foolish. We can't do it, but—"

"We can do it!" interrupted Rylie eagerly. "Let's. Listen, Bill and Flo are at Martin's Cove. Why couldn't we drive up there this evening? If we leave here at eight, we can get there by midnight."

"And have detectives and reporters hiding behind the hedge every time we go for a swim?" Her voice was ironic.

"Isn't so easy as that, Rylie. And think of Web. I wouldn't feel right about running away with him under arrest. We must stay here and see things through. Whatever he has done, has been done to help you, Rylie. I feel sure of that."

The boy turned away, his eyes grown grave. "I'm not so sure," he said. "I've talked to Dad. He isn't admitting it to the police, but he is sure it was Web who telephoned him about that actress. Web was trying mighty hard to stop that wedding."

"You think—"

Lesson for April 15

JESUS TEACHING FORGIVENESS

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 18:15-35.
GOLDEN TEXT—And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.—Matt. 6:12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Helps Peter With a Hard Question.
JUNIOR TOPIC—A Lesson in Kindly Conduct.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Practice Forgiveness.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Is True Forgiveness?

This lesson touches a most vital subject, a most practical one for our everyday lives. We are always surrounded by wicked men, ill-treatment we shall most surely receive, for all who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution (II Tim. 3:12).

1. How to Gain an Erring Brother (vv. 15-20).

To bring a sinning brother to a knowledge of his sin and restore him to fellowship with his Lord and to fellowship with the saints is to gain him. Therefore the transcendent aim should be to win him. The method to be used is

1. Personal (v. 15). Go and tell him his fault alone. The aim in this personal effort is not to charge him with sin but to bring him to see his sin.

2. The help of a comrade (v. 16). "Take with thee one or two more." The presence of one or two Christian brethren helps in making known his fault.

3. Tell it to the church (v. 17). Sometimes the church can accomplish that which the individual and the one or two brethren fail to do.

4. The binding authority of the church's decision (vv. 18-20). When the church follows the instruction of the Lord, gathers in the name of Jesus Christ and is actuated by the Holy Spirit, its decisions are final.

11. The Limit of Forgiveness (vv. 21, 22).

1. Peter's question (v. 21). From Christ's teaching as to the efforts to bring about reconciliation in case of offenses between brethren, he knew that the spirit of forgiveness would be required. The rabbi taught that one, two, or even three offenses should be forgiven but the fourth should be punished. Peter disposed to be gracious inquired, "Till seven times?" showing his readiness to forgive his brethren not three times merely but twice three times and a little over.

2. Jesus' answer (v. 22). This answer astonished Peter. Jesus said "not till seven times but until seventy times seven," showing that willingness to forgive should be practically limitless. The Christian should be so filled with the love of Christ that he will forgive whenever being called upon to do so.

3. Christ's principle of forgiveness (vv. 23-35). This principle is illustrated by the story of the two creditors.

a. The gracious creditor (vv. 23-27). The king in this parable represents God. The servant who is greatly in debt represents the sinner—any sinner, every sinner, you and me. We were hopelessly in debt to God. Ten million talents are equal to about $12,000,000. To meet this obligation would be an utter impossibility. This man's plea for time, promising to pay all, resembles man's vain imaginations that he can pay his debt to God; that by his future good works he can atone for his past grievous sins. The law says, "Pay all," but Christ forgives all. By the justice of God's law we are hopelessly doomed. By the grace of God we are freely pardoned.

b. The cruel creditor (vv. 28-35). The man who was forgiven so much found the man who owed him a small sum, about $17. He shut his ears to the man's entreaty to be patient with him, flew at his throat and cruelly put him into prison. The great mercy shown him did not touch his heart, so he refused to be merciful. Every one who is unforgiving shows that the forgiveness of God in Jesus Christ has not been experienced. Being set free from so great a debt as our sins against God, we should make God's act of unlimited forgiveness toward us a standard of unlimited forgiveness toward others. In dealing with others we should always keep before us

(1). That we constantly need the forgiveness of God. When we pray, "forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors," let us be sure that we have put away all thought of things held against others.

(2). There is a day of judgment coming and at that day we shall be treated as we treat others. No mercy will be shown to those who have not shown mercy. God's action toward us should be the standard of our action toward others.

Romance a Help

"Romance and business won't mix." "Romance never hurt my business any."

"What do you manufacture?" "Hammocks."

The Dashing Type

We got a shock as we heard this from a flip flapper in the old family barber shoppe:

"Miss, how shall I bob your hair?"

"Bandit style."

"Two things I wanted—"

"...and it was all so simple when I found out my trouble. My physician said I had no organic disease, but I did have what is so commonly and truthfully called a low percentage of hemo-glo-bin in the blood."

"The reasonableness of one of the S.S.S. ads caused me to think that S.S.S. Tonic was just what I needed for my let-down feeling, pimply skin and low resistance. I wanted more strength and a clear skin."

"It didn't take S.S.S. very long to get my blood back up to normal—and as my strength and energy returned my skin cleared up."

If your condition suggests a tonic of this kind, try S.S.S. It is not just a so-called tonic but a tonic specially designed to stimulate gastric secretions, and also having the mineral elements so very, very necessary in rebuilding the oxygen-carrying hemo-glo-bin of the blood.

S.S.S. value has been proven by generations of use, as well as by modern scientific appraisal. Sold by all drug stores... In two convenient sizes... the larger is more economical.

Thousands have Ended their Bowel Worries

by taking this advice!

Can constipation safely be relieved? "Yes!" say medical men. "Yes!" say the many thousands who have followed their advice and know.

You are not likely to cure your constipation with salts, pills, tablets or any of the habit-forming cathartics. But you can safely relieve this condition by gentle regulation with a suitable liquid laxative.

THE LIQUID TEST:

First: select a properly prepared liquid laxative. Second: take the dose you find suited to your system. Third: gradually reduce the dose until bowels are moving of their own accord.

Simple, isn't it? And it works! The right liquid laxative brings thorough bowel action without using force. An approved liquid laxative (one which is most widely used for both adults and children) is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is a doctor's prescription, and perfectly safe. Its laxative action is based on senna, a natural laxative; the dose can be measured, and the action thus regulated to suit your individual need.

If there are children in your household, don't give them any form of laxative, but use a healthful, helpful preparation like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Its very taste will tell you it is wholesome, and agreeable to the stomach. Delightful taste, and delightful action; there is no discomfort at the time, or after. Ask your druggist for Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, all ready to take.

A Frank Statement Concerning Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin

We believe the use of pills and tablets containing mineral drugs is rapidly giving way to gentle regulation of the bowels with a liquid laxative.

We believe Dr. Caldwell's original prescription of fresh herbs, pure pepsin, and senna is the ideal family laxative.

And we know it is a safe preparation for children and expectant mothers because it does not cause bowel strain or irritate the kidneys.

A kindergarten in Her basement

What clean, automatic gas heat has done for Mrs. J. M. West, 213 W. 15th Place, Chicago Heights

LOOK into the basement of a typical gas-heated home—see what happens when soot, dirt, and furnace mess have been eliminated! Like Mrs. West's, thousands of home owners now have clean basement playrooms, workrooms, game rooms—due to gas heat.

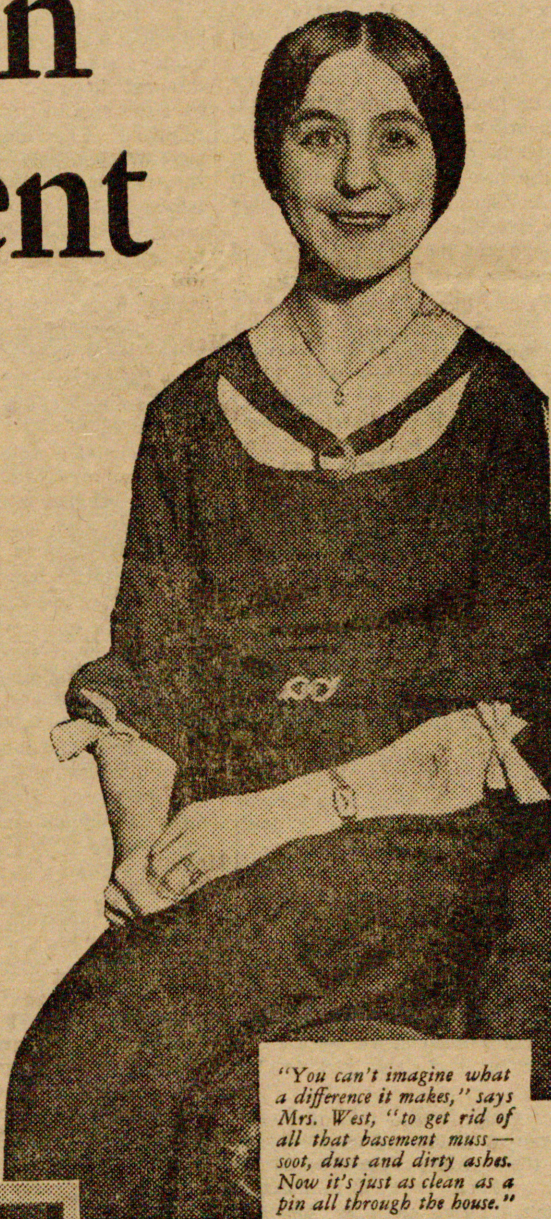

Imagine your own basement rid of the coal bin—rid of dirty ash buckets and furnace muck. Perhaps a game room, where the children are out of the way. Now that gas-heating rates are so low, it is pure folly to delay any longer. Think of it—gas heating rates are now only half of what they were during the 1930-31 heating season.

expense. You pay only the rental on the equipment, which amounts to $3 a month in the average home. The charge is included with the bill for the gas you use. You try it for a month, two months, a year. And if within the year you find that you are not completely satisfied with gas, we will take it out at our expense and replace your former heating equipment in good workmanlike order. But if you decide to keep gas heat—as we think you will—the rental you have paid applies on the purchase price of the equipment.

Act now!

Don't delay! You never will regret accepting this liberal offer on gas heat. Call your nearest Public Service office for full information.

You invest nothing to try
And you can try gas heat without investing one cent! We will install a burner in your present furnace or boiler at our own

"You can't imagine what a difference it makes," says Mrs. West, "to get rid of all that basement muck—soot, dust and dirty ashes. Now it's just as clean as a pin all through the house."

You Never Have to Order Gas

You never have to order gas—it is always under orders to serve you.
Morning, noon, and night it is at your command.
Should you fail to stock your larder for the week-end, or should extra company visit you unexpectedly, you might have to scurry around to meet unforeseen demands.
Not so with gas.
Public Service Company of Northern Illinois has learned to anticipate your demands for fuel and how to meet them.
For many of its employees, Sundays and holidays means days devoted to your service. Day in and day out, through rain, sleet and snow, these workers are busy in order that an unfailing supply of gas flows to you instantly at your command.

Mrs. West's basement kindergarten room is spic and span—thanks to gas heat. "And gas heat keeps the house right at the temperature we want it, night and day," says Mrs. West.

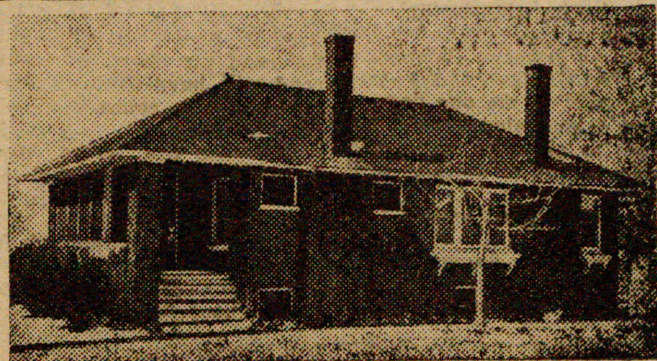

STARTLING TRIAL OFFER!

To prove that every home can afford to heat with gas, we'll install it at our expense... and remove it at our expense, if you don't like it.

YOU INVEST NOTHING!

Without ONE CENT of investment by you, we install the most modern burner in your furnace or boiler. If you are satisfied, it stays. If not—and you are the sole judge—out it comes and your former heating system is re-installed—AT OUR EXPENSE. We make this offer because of our confidence in the perfection of gas heat.

The West home at 213 W. 15th Place, Chicago Heights. More than 20,000 Chicago-area homes are now heating with gas.

Gas heat can be installed in your home without allowing the house to cool off

Along the Concrete

Our Pet Peeve—

EXPEDITION FINDS ANTIOCH HOUSE 1,600 YEARS OLD

Archeologists have dug up a villa at Antioch that dates from 1,600 years ago. It has colonnades and mosaic pavements, along with domes decorated with colored glass and gold leaf. It was found at Daphne, or rather a suburb of that ancient place in Yakto, a modern suburb of Antioch.

The discovery was made by the Princeton university expedition. There is in the suburb a huge circus or stadium, three times as large as Palmer stadium at Princeton, that seats 55,000, and lead and terra cotta pipes were found in place, along with a huge bath. All were built, it is surmised, in 67-68 B. C. by Quintus Marcus Rex, proconsul of Cilicia.

Antioch goes back to 300 years before Christ, and was named after Antiochus by his son. It was the ancient capital of the Greek kings of Syria, and was located on the Orontes, some twenty miles from the sea. Its port was Seleucia. It is frequently mentioned in the New Testament, and it was there that disciples of our Savior were first called Christians. Syria was first conquered by Pompey and later captured by the Persians and made a heap of ruins. It was restored by the Emperor Justinian in 538. In the Seventh century the Saracens took it and held it for 300 years. Now it is a poor town, manufacturing silks, leather and carpets, and producing goat's wool and beeswax.

Old Virginia City

Old-timers enjoy telling tales of the early days of Virginia City. Some go so far as to predict another "strike" and again see the boom come as it did before. When news of the Comstock lode reached the outside world, prospectors and their satellites came from far and near. The village of 1858 became a city of over 30,000 inhabitants almost overnight. Today Virginia City, while living in its past glories, is just a visiting spot for tourists. The census figures tell the story. The entire county of Storey, in which Virginia City precinct is located, shows that in 1890 there were 8,806 inhabitants. In 1900 this figure had dropped to 3,673. By 1929 there were only 1,409 inhabitants and the census of 1930 gives the entire county only 687 bona fide residents.—Pathfinder Magazine.

HE WAS "AMERICA'S TROUBADOUR"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT WAS a Scotch political writer who, more than two centuries ago, said in substance: "I care not who makes a nation's laws, if I have the making of its ballads," but it remained for an American to give real significance to that oft-quoted—and usually misquoted—saying. With but few exceptions, the fame of the hundreds of our lawmakers has scarcely survived their brief moment on the stage of history, but the fame of Stephen Foster has endured for nearly a century and seems likely to endure for centuries to come. For he was the man who wrote some of a nation's best-loved ballads and a new biography of him by John Tasker Howard, published by the Thomas Y. Crowell company, bears the appropriate title of "Stephen Foster, America's Troubadour."

Considering the place which Foster and his songs hold in the hearts of his countrymen, it is also appropriate that the birthday of the nation should also be his birthday. For he was born on July 4, 1826, the fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, and at noon on that day he was ushered into the world to the tune of "Hail Columbia," "Yankee Doodle," "Hail to the Chief" and "The Star Spangled Banner," played by blaring bands, "while cannon with their noisy salutes shook the ground so heavily that some were afraid they would disturb the delicate, though accustomed, operation at the White Cottage" in Lawrenceville, Pa. (now a district in the city of Pittsburgh).

The reference to the "accustomed operation" is to the fact that the new member of the Foster family was the ninth child born to William B. and Eliza Foster and "had Stephen been the first, rather than the ninth child his wife had borne him, William B. Foster might not have felt as free to absent himself from his home at noon on that 4th of July." But that does not necessarily mean that such events were too commonplace to keep William Foster at the side of his wife. For he was a prosperous merchant and trader, a leading citizen of the community on the banks of the Allegheny river and on that particular occasion an assistant to the mayor of Pittsburgh in the conduct of the Independence Day celebration—a good reason for his absence from the White Cottage.

A part of the celebration was an "excellent dinner" at which 13 toasts (in honor of the Thirteen Original States) were given and William Foster "came second, as first vice president of the day, following the mayor, who drank to 'The United States of America.' Foster toasted 'The Independence of the United States' . . . 'acquired by the blood and valor of our venerable progenitors. To us they bequeathed the dear bought inheritance; to our care and protection they consigned it; and the most sacred obligations are upon us to transmit the glorious purchase, unfettered by power, to our innocent and beloved offspring.' Was he thinking of his latest offspring, of whose coming by this time he must have known?"

Under the circumstances the newcomer in the Foster household perhaps should have been given a name in keeping with the importance of that day, for it was one of the most significant Independence days in our history in that it saw the death of two former Presidents—Thomas Jefferson and John Adams. A month later a relative, writing to the little boy's older sister, Charlotte Foster, asked "How does . . . the little Hero, for I prophesy he will be one, being born on so great and eventful a day. You certainly ought to call him Jefferson or Adams and no other name. . . ." But his mother thought otherwise. She named him Stephen Collins for the son of a neighbor and childhood friend of hers, a little boy who had died just before her son was born.

The youngest member of a large family, Stephen was both petted and spoiled, but he seems never to have been very well understood by the other Fosters. His aptitude for music came into evidence early. When he was two, he would place his sister's guitar on the floor and, bending over it, pick out harmonies from its strings. When he was seven he was taken into a music store by one of his brothers. There he saw a flageolet, picked it up and was playing a tune upon it before his brother realized what he was doing.

At the age of thirteen Stephen was taken by his older brother, William, to Towanda, Pa., so he could attend Athens academy at Tioga Point, not far away. But the boy was homesick at Athens and spent much of his time with his brother at Towanda, attending the Towanda academy as well as the one at Tioga Point. He was not a particularly apt student and about the only importance there is to this period in his career is that during this time he composed his first music, "The Tioga Waltz," arranged for four flutes and written for the commencement exercises at Athens, upon which occasion Stephen played the leading part himself, while three other students played the remaining parts.

In 1841 Stephen entered Jefferson college at Canonsburg, Pa., 18 miles from his home at Pittsburgh, and stayed in this institution just seven days. Then, overcome by homesickness, he left college, never again to seek a formal education. A year later he composed the music for his first song "Open Thy Lattice, Love," a poem written by George P. Morris which had appeared in a supplement to the New Mirror.

OPEN THY LATTICE LOVE

Lines from the New Mirror

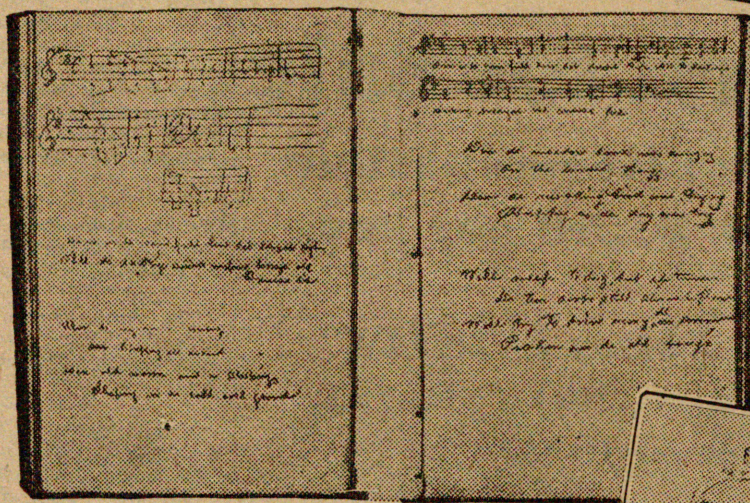

Says the biographer: "Poor Stephen, the publisher failed to print his name correctly on his very first song!" Perhaps it was prophetic of the long list of misfortunes that were to be his throughout his career.

It was during this period that the first negro minstrel shows began to appear on the American scene and Pittsburgh seems to have enjoyed its share of them. Foster "found the songs of the current minstrel shows crude, vulgar ditties that struck the popular fancy, but which nevertheless were lyrics and songs that in spite of their vulgarity actually represented something definitely American. Stephen made of this class of music a literature that is well worth preserving—he brought artistry and sincerity to a medium that before his entry had reeked of the alley and the barroom."

The gayest of them all is "O, Susanna!" written when Stephen was a blithe young blade of nineteen. He had a half dozen boon companions, youths of his own age, who met regularly twice a week to sing at Stephen's home. They brought their banjos and guitars with them, and called themselves "Knights of the Square Table." It was for this group that Stephen wrote many of his finest and earliest songs, including "Louisiana Belle," "Uncle Ned" and "O, Susanna!" The latter was immediately taken up by all the minstrel shows, of which there were a great number then on the road. It also became the marching song and the campfire song of the Forty-niners on their way to the gold fields of California.

For "O, Susanna!" Foster received $100, an event which determined his career for him. "Imagine my delight in receiving $100 in cash!" he wrote later. "Though this song was not successful, yet the two $50 bills I received for it had the effect of starting me on my present vocation."

Of all the popular songs that had their birth on American soil in Foster's time, his were the only ones that lived. The others were sung for a year or two and forgotten. Curiously enough, Stephen imagined that his songs would be forgotten as quickly as the others. It never seemed to occur to him that they might have the seeds of immortality in them. Proof of this was to be found in his willingness, after receiving $1,600 in royalties for one of his songs in six years, to sell the copyright for $100 in the belief that its day was nearly spent and it would not be likely to bring in more than that. So he presented "O, Susanna!" and "Old Uncle Ned" to W. C. Peters, a friend of the family who was in the music publishing business and who proceeded to make $10,000 out of them.

Foster's indifference to what became of his songs led to their being copyrighted by other persons. Even in the case of "Old Folks at Home," a song which became world-famous and which Mr. Howard believes has been printed more often than either "Home, Sweet Home" or "Annie Laurie," he authorized, for a small consideration, the publication under the name of E. P. Christy, who headed the Christy minstrels.

Morrison Foster has related how his brother came to him with a letter from E. P. Christy asking the composer to write a song for him to sing before it was published.

Morrison told Stephen not to do it unless Christy paid him. A form of agreement was drawn up and the paper was sent to Christy. Afterward, when the song had become closely associated with Christy's name and had been copyrighted with his name as author and composer, Stephen wrote to Christy to permit him to claim it as his own. He wrote humbly: "On receipt of your free consent to this proposition, I will, if you wish, willingly refund you the money which you paid me on that song, though it may have been sent me for other considerations than the one in question, and I promise in addition to write you an opening chorus in my best style, free of charge, and in any other way to advance your interests hereafter. I find I cannot write at all unless I write for public approbation and get credit for what I write."

Although Stephen had told Christy that he could accomplish little so long as "Old Folks at Home" stared him in the face with another man's name on it and although he expressed the hope that the singer would appreciate an author's feelings in the case, there is no record of a reply from Christy, and it was a long, long time before Foster's name appeared on the song. Although Morrison Foster said Stephen received $500 for the song, he confessed to a friend in New York that he got from $10 to $15 for his songs from Christy, but that he received two cents a copy for the 100,000 copies of the first edition which was soon exhausted. Adeline Patti and Christine Nilsson helped to make the song popular by singing it in their concerts.

The story has often been told of how the Suwannee river, a small stream in Florida which Stephen never saw, or even knew of, came to

STRANGE, BUT TRUE

"Have you noticed a very odd thing about blunt people?" Freeman asked his friend.
"Can't say that I have," said the latter. "They are certainly rather embarrassing at times."
Freeman nodded pensively.
"Yes, but hasn't it ever struck you that they are the ones who generally come to the point first?" he said.

"Wish him the same, I s'pose," said Peggy.—Boston Transcript.

MACHINE AGE

"The machine age is taking away a vast number of jobs," said the mechanic.

"Don't I know it?" affirmed an office man. "It cost me my job."

"How is that?" inquired the first speaker. "You have never done any mechanical labor, have you?"

"No," he admitted, "but I got my job when the Republicans were in power; and now the Democratic machine has taken it away."

Aptly Named

They were discussing winter sports. "By the way," said the young bachelor, "can you tell me why the word 'skis' is nearly always pronounced 'shes'?"

His much-married friend gave a cynical smile.

"Yes," he said. "Probably it's because a novice never knows what they are going to do next."

David Harum

Coming to Joliet

Will Rogers was happy when Fox
Film executives decided to produce
"David Harum" with himself in the title role.The part has long been hailed as tailor-made for Rogers, tho the only similarity between the real Will Rogers and the tight-fisted banker, David Harum, seems to be the wit and dry philosophy of both.David Harum did not go in for charity. He was what is known in rural circles as a "sharper". Rogers, on the other hand, gives much of his money away to deserving people and worthy causes, tho he refuses any publication relating to his good works.Rogers had no hand in selecting the cast for the picture, but suggested and with some emphasis, Louise Dresser for the role of David Harum's sister, and she was awarded the part."David Harum will be shown at the Rialto Theatre at Joliet for six days, starting Monday April 16th.
The theatre features a daily matinee until 6 p. m.

CASS STREET

His Instructions

The broker was very sick, and at times delirious. In one of his lucid moments he asked the nurse what the last readings had shown his temperature to be. "One hundred and one,"
she said. "Good," said the patient.
"When it gets to 101 1/2, sell."

Genius Budded Early

Douglas Jerrold achieved success on the stage with a farce written when he was fourteen, and William Henry Ireland produced his famous Shakespeare forgeries, and for a time deceived the most learned men in the country, when he was only seventeen.
